But little is known of the politics of the first five Clerks of the House of Representatives. Beckley,

Clerks of the House of Representatives. Beckley, according to Jefferson's mempirs, was a sort of Paul Pry, or eves dropper, who reported the sayings and doings of the federal members of Congress and other gossip to Mr. Jefferson. He was doubtless a democrat. His successor, chosen in May, 1797, Jonathan Williams Condy, we conclude was a federalist, as that party then had a majority in the House of Representatives, as well as in the Senate. He resigned in 1800, and was succeeded by John Holt Oswald, who we believe was of the family of Oswald, a democratic editor in New York during Washing-ton's administration. In December, 1801, Jefferson being President, his friend Beckley, the former Clerk, was again chosen to that office, and continued in the same until October, 1807, when Patrick Magruder was chosen by a democratic House. After nearly eight years service, Magruder resigned, and in January, 1815, was succeeded by Thomas Dougherty, of Kentucky, also a democrat. He was continued in office until 1822, when he died during the recess of Congress. His successor, Matthew St. Clair Clarke, of Pennsylvania, originally a democrat, but the favorite of all parties, was long known at Washington by members, citizens and visiters to the Capitol, as the prince of good fellows, a bon vivant and boon companion with all who enjoyed his acquaintance. He gave a new character to the office of Clerk of the House, became conspicuous as a citizen of Washington City, entered into all the best plans for the improvement of the national metropolis, and erected a splendid mansion on the square opposite the President's house, where he entertained his friends with unbounded hospitality. He and others formed a plan for publishing these ponderous volumes of documentary history called the "American Archives," and Clarke and Peter Force obtained an important contract from Congress to publish these documents, which are still progressing slowly under the management of Mr. Force, who is now, we believe, the sole contractor with the government for the publication, Mr. Clarke having sold out his interest to him, some years before his death, which took place, May 6, 1852, when he was sixty one years old.

Mr. Clarke continued to sustain himself in his position as Clerk for some years after the election of General Jackson to the Presidency, having changed from an Adams man to a moderate Jacksonian; but the democratic supporters of Jackson finally insisted upon his removal for a more ardent friend of the administration, and in December, 1833, the popular Mr. Clarke, after eleven years service, was compelled to submit to be defeated by Walter S. Franklin, a Pennsylvania Jackson man, of whose democracy there was no doubt. Mr. Franklin died in September, 1838, and in December of that year the House made choice of Hugh A. Garland, a Virginia democrat, friendly to Van Buren's administration. The great importance of the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, was brought prominently to the notice of the neople at the meeting of Congress in December, 1839, when Mr. Garland, holding over as Clerk of the last House, in calling the roil of the members elect, declined to call those of the whig members from New Jersey, who had a certificate with the Governor's "broad seal," but whose seats were contested by democrats who elaimed to be elected. The difficulties in which the House were involved, by this state of things, were finally overcome by the novel proposition of John Quincy, Adams, to choose a chairman of the House until the Speaker could be elected. This coarse was adopted, and Mr. Adams elected Chairman; a few days after which, Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, was chosen Speaker, and Mr. Garland re-elected as Clerk.

In May, 1841, the whigs, having a majority at the there was no doubt. Mr. Franklin died in Septem chosen Speaker, and Mr. Garland re-elected as Clerk.

In May, 1841, the whigs, having a majority at the session called by President Harrison, Francis O. J. Smith, of Maine, (now of telegraph notoriety.) was nominated in the whig caucus for Clerk, but Mr. Wise, of Virginia, with a few other whigs, preferred Mr. Clarke, the old and popular Clerk from 1822 to 1833, and refused to vote for Smith. Thereupon, the democrats dropped their own candidate, and uniting with the bolting whigs, elected Mr. Clarke, much to the chagrin of Mr. Smith and the caucus whigs. The friendship of John Tyler and many democrats could not save Mr. Clarke when the democrats could not save Mr. Clarke when the democrats obtained the majority in the House, in 1843. The notorious Caleb J. McNulty, of Ohio, was the successful candidate, in December, 1843. He enjoyed his honors and emoluments but a short time, however: coming to the city of New York, with a portion of the funds of Congress in his hands, McNulty fell into bad company, and consequently became a public defaulter. He was therefore summarily dismissed from the effice of Clerk, and Mr. B. B. French, of New Hampshire, elected in his place. McNulty died not long after his dismissal from office. He belonged to the school of Ohio rowdy democrats, a most violent set of politicians, and always clamorous for office.

Mr. Thomas J. Campbell, of Tennessee, was longed to the school of Ohio rowdy democrats, a most violent set of politicians, and always clamorous for office.

Mr. Thomas J. Campbell, of fennessee, was formerly a whig member of Congress from that State, and was a man highly respected. He was elected by the whigs in 1847, and reelected by the aid of a few democratic votes in 1849. He died in April, 1850, and was succeeded by Richard M. Young, formerly a democratic Senator from Illinois. The present incumbent was the successor of Mr. Young.

The position of Clerk of the House of Representatives, it will be seen, has continued to grow in importance, but the real amount of advantages and opportunities enjoyed by the person holding the office can only be imperfectly seen by the people. In the hands of an unscrupulous and unprincipled politician, with the powers of the lobby to back him, it is impossible to foresee the mischief which the Clerk can perpetrate, even when carefully watched by impossible to foresee the mischiet which the Creation perpetrate, even when carefully watched by more honest men than are often found in the purlieus of the Capitol.
